

Author Guidelines for Article Submissions

We appreciate all written contributions to topics that interest our readers and contribute to promoting infection prevention and control best practices, and providing insights on public health-related topics that relate to infection prevention practice.

We abide by strict editorial standards to ensure the quality and authenticity of our content, and we welcome submissions from authors who share our commitment to excellence and integrity.

Here are our guidelines for submissions:

1. Originality

We require all submissions to be original works created by the author. Submitted content must be free of plagiarism and not generated by artificial intelligence.

2. Exclusivity

We only accept works that have not been previously published in other publications. This policy helps prevent copyright infringement and ensures the uniqueness of our content.

3. Revisions

We understand that revisions may be necessary to meet our editorial standards, and it is possible that multiple rounds of revisions may be necessary during the content approval process. Authors are encouraged to address any feedback provided and submit a revised version of their work.
